A. INTRODUCTION

Guidance and counselling play a crucial role in supporting the academic, social, emotional, and personal development of students in college. Amidst the challenges of the complex and diverse world of lectures, students often face academic pressure, personal problems, and confusion in planning for the future. In situations like this, counselling is a strategic means to help students identify problems, understand themselves, and make the right decisions. Therefore, the presence of counselling guidance services is an integral part of a holistic higher education system that is in favour of student welfare.

Students should utilise counselling guidance services when they encounter obstacles that they cannot solve on their own, whether these concerns relate to academic issues such as learning difficulties and determining majors, or to non-academic topics such as anxiety, social conflict, and identity crises. In addition, counselling guidance can also be done preventively, that is, before the problem develops into a more complex one. Therefore, it is essential for students not to delay seeking help and to realise that accessing counselling services is not a sign of weakness, but a wise step to develop their potential optimally.

The methods of counselling guidance in universities are quite diverse, depending on the needs and conditions of students. Some commonly used methods include individual counselling, group counselling, and online counselling. The approach used can be direct, such as cognitive-behavioural therapy, or a non-directive approach that provides space for students to explore themselves. In addition, the use of technology and information systems is becoming increasingly important in reaching students more widely and efficiently.

The expected impact of implementing counselling guidance in higher education includes improving students' mental health, developing social and emotional skills, and enhancing academic achievement. Students who actively participate in counselling tend to have higher self-confidence, can manage stress better, and exhibit adaptive behaviour in campus life. Institutionally, this will also have an impact on improving the quality of graduates who are not only intellectually intelligent but also psychologically and socially mature.

At the State University of Surabaya (UNESA), counselling guidance services are also available through an integrated digital information system, namely through the SIDIA platform with a complaint feature called ANSIA. Through ANSIA, students can submit complaints, problems, and requests for counselling assistance online, making it easier to access without time and place barriers. This innovation represents a concrete step for UNESA in delivering responsive, adaptive, and timely counselling services that meet the needs of students.

CLOSING

Thus, we have compiled a report on Guidance and Counselling activities in 2023 as a form of accountability for the implementation of BK services for one year. The activities that have been carried out reflect genuine efforts in providing optimal services to students, both in academic, personal, social, and career aspects. Although it has been done well, we realise that there are still shortcomings in the implementation and preparation of this report. Therefore, we hope to receive input and suggestions from various parties to improve Guidance and Counselling activities and services in the coming years. Finally, we would like to thank all parties who have provided support, cooperation, and contributions in making this activity a success. Hopefully, Guidance and counselling services in the future can further develop and have a greater positive impact on students and the educational environment as a whole.

A. INTRODUCTION

Guidance and counselling have an essential role in supporting the academic, social, emotional, and personal development of students in college. Amidst the challenges of the complex and diverse world of lectures, students often face academic pressure, personal problems, and confusion in planning for the future. In situations like this, counselling is a strategic means to help students identify problems, understand themselves, and make the right decisions. Therefore, the presence of counselling guidance services is an integral part of a holistic higher education system that is in favour of student welfare.

Students should utilise counselling guidance services when they encounter obstacles that they cannot solve on their own, whether it concerns academic problems such as learning difficulties and determining majors, or non-academic issues such as anxiety, social conflict, and identity crises. In addition, counselling guidance can also be done preventively, that is, before the problem develops into a more complex one. Therefore, it is essential for students not to delay seeking help and to realise that accessing counselling services is not a sign of weakness, but a wise step to develop their potential optimally.

The methods of counselling guidance in universities are quite diverse, depending on the needs and conditions of students. Some commonly used methods include individual counselling, group counselling, and online counselling. The approach used can be direct, such as cognitive-behavioural therapy, or a non-directive approach that provides space for students to explore themselves. Additionally, the use of technology and information systems is becoming increasingly important in reaching students more widely and efficiently.

The expected impact of implementing counselling guidance in higher education includes improving students' mental health, developing social and emotional skills, and enhancing academic achievement. Students who actively participate in counselling tend to have higher self-confidence, can manage stress better, and exhibit adaptive behaviour in campus life. Institutionally, this will also have an impact on improving the quality of graduates who are not only intellectually intelligent but also psychologically and socially mature.

At the Universitas Negeri Surabaya (UNESA), counselling guidance services are also available through an integrated digital information system, namely the SIDIA platform, which features a complaint system called SIANIA (Student Complaint and Counselling Information System). Through SIANIA, students can submit complaints, problems, and requests for counselling assistance online, making it easier to access services without time and place barriers. This innovation represents a concrete step for UNESA in delivering responsive, adaptive, and timely counselling services that meet the needs of students.

Mental health is an integral part of overall health. College students, as individuals who are in a critical transition to adulthood, face a variety of challenges that can affect their mental health. Therefore, providing mental health materials in a higher education environment is very important. Here are some of the main reasons: With this activity, it is hoped that it can provide useful views and information for students who will graduate in preparing for the world of work, as well as inviting students to take opportunities in various activities on campus and outside the campus that can improve their skills and experience in preparing for the world of work.

CLOSING

Thus, we have compiled a report on Guidance and Counselling activities in 2024 as a form of accountability for the implementation of BK services for one year. The activities that have been conducted reflect genuine efforts in providing optimal services to students, both in academic, personal, social, and career aspects. Although it has been performed well, we realise that there are still shortcomings in the implementation and preparation of this report. Therefore, we hope for input and suggestions from various parties to improve Guidance and Counselling activities and services in the coming years. Finally, we would like to thank all parties who have provided support, cooperation, and contributions in making this activity a success. Hopefully, Guidance and counselling services in the future can further develop and have a greater positive impact on students and the educational environment as a whole.

SECOND ACTIVITY

Mental health classes

Mental health is a fundamental aspect of student life that is often overlooked amid dense academic and social activities. During the lecture period, students face various challenges, ranging from academic pressure to adjusting to a new environment and finding their identity. All of these things can affect their psychological state if not handled appropriately. Mental health class activities are designed to provide students with understanding, skills, and support in maintaining and improving their mental health. Through an educational and interactive approach, students are equipped with insights into stress, anxiety, depression, and healthy and effective coping strategies.

The importance of this class lies in its prevention and empowerment efforts. With good knowledge and awareness, students can become more emotionally resilient, able to manage stress wisely, and maintain a balance in their lives. Furthermore, good mental health will support academic achievement and the quality of healthy social relationships.

Therefore, this class is expected to be a conducive forum for students to recognise, understand, and address their psychological conditions independently and collectively. This activity is not only a response to existing mental health challenges but also a long-term investment in creating a healthy, intelligent, and resilient young generation.

I. Introduction

In a life full of dynamics and challenges, every individual is bound to face difficult situations, pressures, or failures. Whether it's in the form of academic problems, social conflicts, loss, or prolonged stress, all of them are a natural part of life's journey. However, not everyone has the same ability to face and rise from the situation. This is where psychological resilience comes in, which is the ability to adapt positively amid stress or difficulty.

Resilience does not mean that a person does not feel negative emotions such as sadness, anxiety, or disappointment. On the other hand, resilient individuals can manage these emotions healthily, maintain hope, and remain productive even when they are in less-than-ideal conditions. In the context of fast-paced and competitive modern life, building resilience is key to maintaining mental health, improving well-being, and forming a resilient and adaptive mindset.

Various studies show that resilience is not only related to personality factors or innate talents, but can also be formed and improved through practice and experience. Factors such as social support, positive thinking, problem-solving skills, and meaning in life contribute significantly to strengthening individual resilience. Therefore, everyone—especially students and the younger generation—needs to understand the concept of psychological resilience and apply it in their daily lives.

This material will discuss the concept of psychological resilience in depth, its benefits for quality of life, and practical strategies to foster and strengthen resilience in the face of life's challenges. By building strong resilience, it is hoped that each individual will be able to live a healthier mental life, be better prepared to face change, and be wiser in responding to pressure that arises.

II. Activity Implementation

Mental Health activities with the theme "PSYCHOLOGICAL RESILIENCE FOR A BETTER LIFE" WERE organised by THE Faculty Guidance Counselling Team. This activity was conducted offline in Building i3, the Lecture Building of the Department of Geography Education. The activity was carried out in the lecture room because, at that time, there were many activities in the faculty, so they did not have adequate space for activities. The technical activities began with the opening by the Master of Ceremony (MC), reading the order of the event, remarks, material presentations, question and answer sessions, and ended with the documentation of the activity. The implementation of activities has been carried out on:

Day	: Thursday

Mental Health activities with the theme "PSYCHOLOGICAL RESILIENCE FOR A BETTER LIFE" HAVE BEEN CARRIED OUT WELL AND CONDUCTIVELY. This activity was attended by more than a total of 50 students, 5 lecturers, and staff, consisting of the Batches of 2023 and 2024. In the activity, the event brought speakers from the Guidance Counseling Bell Center, named Devi Permatasari, M.Pd., during the delivery of the activity material went smoothly. With good coordination, the committee can minimize the occurrence of obstacles during the activity. Even so, there are still some obstacles or obstacles that are evaluated for us in the implementation of the next activity. ### Activity 3 (HOME VISIT)

Problems faced by students in the higher education process can come from various aspects, both academic, psychological, social, and economic. Not all students can convey their problems openly, so it requires a special approach that is more personalized. One of the strategic efforts in establishing closer communication and understanding the condition of students as a whole is through home visits or visits to students' homes. Home visit activities are part of the Guidance and Counseling service, which functions as a bridge between the campus and the personal life of students. By visiting the environment where students live, it is hoped that the lecturer or supervisor can get more complete information about the situation and background of the problems faced. This approach is not only informative but also empathetic, as it involves direct interaction with students and their families. Through this activity, it is hoped that an emotional bond and trust will be created between students and the campus. In addition, home visits also provide space for families to be involved in the process of solving student problems, as well as supporting the growth of collective awareness in creating a conducive learning environment. Thus, home visits are not only a form of attention and concern of educational institutions for their students, but also a tangible manifestation of commitment in shaping the character, independence, and mental well-being of students holistically. This approach is expected to provide a more precise, comprehensive, and humane solution in dealing with students who face difficulties during their education.

Home visits have been conducted to 2 students who have problems, until the 13th semester, have not yet taken the proposal exam and is inactive.

1. Ananda Sukma Class of 2018

The home visit will be conducted on February 23, 2025, namely in Temu gang 3 Mojosari Village, Mojokerto. When the visit was able to meet the person concerned and admitted that 26 courses had not passed, at that time, the person concerned had difficulty paying the tuition fee, and because of his broken home, his parents divorced.

CLOSING

Thus, we have compiled a report on Guidance and Counseling activities in 2023 as a form of accountability for the implementation of Guidance and Counseling services for one year. The activities that have been carried out reflect real efforts in providing optimal services to students, both in academic, personal, social, and career aspects. Although it has been done well, we realize that there are still shortcomings in the implementation and preparation of this report. Therefore, we hope for input and suggestions from various parties to improve Guidance and Counseling activities and services in the coming years. Finally, we would like to thank all parties who have provided support, cooperation, and contributions in making this activity a success. Hopefully, Guidance and Counseling services in the future can further develop and have a greater positive impact on students and the educational environment as a whole.
